3, 2017. 9 Ediciones. More The IMF and other leading economists agree on the basic lines of what constitutes an economic disaster. The definition boils down to “a severe, widespread, and prolonged decline in economic activity, income and living standards, with a high probability of reversal of the collapse.” Each of these three prerequisites is easier to establish when you’re analyzing an overall decline, such as during the Great Depression or the Asian financial crisis of 1997. Each of them is harder to establish when you’re dealing with a single company, industry, or geographical area. Then you have to look at “a high probability of reversal of the collapse” – and that’s really a matter of faith. Are you ready for that kind of faith? A man who made a fortune and built the world’s most powerful private army to defend the system he created, a man who has both the instincts and the experience of a mafia don and the soul of a scholar, has decided to tell you how to create a global financial infrastructure that, while it will never be perfect, will come very close. He’s working on the basis of an idea which he has already developed into a detailed proposal that he is ready to sell. The greatest challenge to his work, as he sees it, is that the establishment already has an infrastructure in place and that, while not exactly perfect, it has been in place for the last 70 years. What it is that you want? What is needed is the systematization of the data about the data, but while the institutions are still up and running, even if they are not working as they should, it will be impossible to achieve that. The progress that the IMF has made in the last thirty years is the proof. But things have changed a lot since that time. You can see it in two areas: one is the deep corruption that has come to the IMF and the International Monetary System (IMS) and the other is the fact that a very large number of very well-trained economists, politicians, and financiers in charge of various countries have gradually changed their minds and accept that the previous model is no longer relevant for their countries. Some of these people are in a position to be able to make the change. Others are going to do their best to oppose it and will take any opportunity to prevent it. Many people who are somewhere in between – people who still want to sell the old world and defend the very old institutions 82157476af
